Background

A long history of whaling and guano mining has given way to fishing and tourism. Remnants of the Abrolhos' colourful history remains.

Structures built by the Batavia survivors, early explorers and guano miners can still be seen today.

Current

The Abrolhos is currently a Class A Reserve vested with the Minister for Fisheries and encompasses all land mass (120+ islands) with a purpose of:

‘Conservation of flora and fauna, tourism, and for purposes associated with the fishing and aquaculture industries.’

DBCA/DPIRD established an interagency project team (IPT) to work collaboratively on a whole-of-Government solution to address existing issues in relation to;

- underdeveloped tourism product
- visitor access to islands
- visitor risk
- environmental impacts

Other key stakeholders will be invited as required to participate in the IPT.

➤ Draft boundaries have been discussed and Body Corporate areas will continue under DPIRD management.
